Unusual or Suspicious transactions

Suspicions transaction means a transaction, including an attempted transaction, whether or not made in cash which, to a person acting in good faith –

a) gives rise to a reasonable ground of suspicion that it may involve proceeds of an offence specified in the Schedule to the Act, regardless of the value involved; or

b) appears to be made in circumstances of unusual or unjustified complexity; or

c) appears to have no economic rationale or Bonafide purpose; or

d) gives rise to a reasonable ground of suspicion that it may involve financing of the activities relating to terrorism;

Explanation: Transaction involving financing of the activities relating to terrorism includes transaction involving funds suspected to be linked or related to, or to be used for terrorism, terrorist acts or by a terrorist, terrorist organization or those who finance or are attempting to finance terrorism.

Identifying 'unusual' or 'suspicious' transactions

Indicators are circumstances that indicate suspicious nature of transactions. Suspicious transaction may result from one indicator or a set of indicators.

Examples of sample indicators of suspicious transactions are listed below. Please note this list is by no means exhaustive but does suggest some potential situations that could be indicative of money laundering taking place particularly where large sums of money are involved.

Type of suspicion	Sample indicators for detection of suspicious transactions
Suspicion of proceeds of crime	• Match of customer details with known criminals or persons with suspicious background. • Customer has been the subject of a law enforcement inquiry. • Customer who conducts transactions in a pattern consistent with criminal proceeds, e.g. in amounts consistent with a lottery scam, illegal immigration. • Transaction involving a jurisdiction/area considered to be high risk from the money laundering or drug trafficking perspective.
Suspicion due to unusual transactions	• Transaction is unnecessarily complex for its stated purpose. (Transactions executed in multiple steps/components to create complexity) • Transaction is inconsistent with financial standing or occupation, or is outside the normal course of business for the customer in light of the information provided by the customer when conducting the transaction or during subsequent contact with the customer. • Multiple related transactions which are split to just below maximum cash limit or reporting requirements. • The amounts or frequency or the stated reason of the transaction does not make sense for the particular customer. • Change in the pattern of business transacted. • Unrelated sender/receiver

Suspicion due to no economic rationale or bonafide purpose	• The volume or frequencies of transactions have no economic rationale or lawful purpose. • Customer who travels unexplained distances to conduct transactions. • Customer who offers false identification, whether evident from the document alone, from the document's lack of connection to the customer, or from the document's context with other documents (e.g., use of identification cards issued by different countries). • Common Unique IDs used by multiple customers. • Common address/telephone used by multiple unrelated receivers. • Customer conducts multiple cash transactions in a single day. • The size of the transaction Itself • Customer is hurried, nervous or evasive. • Customer has vague knowledge about amount of money involved in the transaction. • Customer is accompanied by unrelated individuals. • Multiple customers entered together, then ignore each other. • Suspicion that the customer is acting on behalf of a third party but not disclosing that information. • Customer provides information that seems minimal, possibly false or inconsistent. • Customer changes the information provided after more detailed information is requested. • Customer is reluctant to go forward with a transaction after being informed that identification information will be required. • Customer is reluctant to provide original ID. • Customer makes inquiries or tries to convince staff to avoid reporting.

	• Customer who offers different identifications or different identifiers (such as phone or address) on different occasions with an apparent attempt to avoid linkage of multiple transactions. • The customer changes money that is not consistent with their destination or the terminal or Port that they are travelling from. • The customer conducts regular transactions that do not appear to be travel or business related • The customer conducts large transactions that do not appear to be travel or business related • The customer asks to split a transaction or conducts multiple transactions in the same currency to just under the large transaction level. This is known as 'Smurfing' • The customer downsizes the transaction to just under the large transaction level • The customer does not know how much money they have and asks us to count their cash • Frequent exchange of small denomination notes for large notes or vice versa • The transaction includes some counterfeit notes • Customers who appear to know each other and each do a transaction close to compulsory identification requirement of that jurisdiction. • The customer was seen at another counter or even at a competitor's counter earlier in the day or a few days ago • The customer asks about our internal procedures and doesn't start the transaction until he/she knows what they are. • Mismatching of physical appearance, the age, appearance and dress of the customer conflict with a transaction of that type or value • The transaction is undertaken by one or more intermediaries to protect the identity of the beneficiary or hide their involvement

	• Large cash transactions. • Customer requests that a large amount of foreign currency be exchanged to another foreign currency. • Frequent requests for travelers' cheques, foreign currency drafts or other negotiable instruments. • Customer makes large purchases of travelers' cheques not consistent with known travel plans. • The customer conducts a large encashment of Traveler's Cheques that were purchased very recently
Suspicion of financing of terrorism	• Match of customer details with known terrorists or persons linked with terrorist organizations. • Customer who receives transactions in a pattern consistent with financing of terrorism. • Transaction involving a jurisdiction/area considered to be high risk from the terrorist financing perspective.
Others	• An employee who demonstrates a 'conflict of interests' such as changing money for friends and family.

If a transaction is deemed suspicious it must be recorded on a Suspicious Transaction Form and shall be forwarded to the PRINCIPAL OFFICER. The customer must not be made aware that this form is being completed, as this would be 'tipping off', which is a criminal offence.

Reporting of Suspicious Activity

To the extent possible, all suspicious transactions should be reported to the Principal Officer before they are undertaken in writing.

Full details of all suspicious transactions, whether put through or not, should be reported, in writing, to the Principal Officer immediately.

Any transaction which seems suspicious may be undertaken only with prior approval of Principal Officer in writing.

If the Principal Officer is reasonably satisfied that the suspicious transaction has / may have resulted in money laundering, he should make a report to the appropriate authority viz. the FIU-IND within the prescribed time period.
